The names people give to places are a rich resource for understanding landscape.

Place names tell us about local legends and historical events. They tell us about the people who have lived and worked in a place. Often they simply describe what the place is like.

Many local place names have never been written down. As land ownership and farming or fishing practices have changed, these names also change or are lost.

This exhibition explores the place names of the Causeway Coast and the diverse heritage they reveal to us.

“These things in these places tell us this of these our people.”

Round Our North Corner by G.A. Birmingham and F. Patterson